Dear Ms. Gregory,

Chuck Harder of "For The People," a consumer affairs group which recently relocated from Cedar Key to another Florida town, has devoted much of his magazine space and radio program time during this past year to the subject of UFOs and the alleged conspiracy to keep the truth about them suppressed.

On a number of occasions during such discussions (and again today), Harder has told of how you and your ABC-TV crew spent a week, and about $25,000, preparing a story with Harder about inaccurate credit reporting and its adverse effects on consumers. According to Harder, although your report was "cleared in Washington" for airing, "the New York higher-ups...killed the report" after apparently receiving pressure "from TRW or Equifax or somebody" who might have been offended by the piece.

I would like to know if Harder's version of events is accurate. I am specifically interested in learning if there may have been some other less sinister reason why your network executives might have decided not to air the story that you put together with Harder.

Sincerely,

Gary P. Posner, M.D.
